EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

The Student Affordability Task Force (SATF), membership of which includes students, faculty, and staff (see list below) from both the Vancouver and Okanagan campuses, began meeting in June 2021. In the period between June 2021 and the February 17, 2022 Finance Committee meeting, the SATF will have hosted 12 meetings.

Task force discussion topics and presentations have focused on two sets of related questions, by an extensive set of materials considered by the task force (see list below). The first concerns a conceptual understanding of student affordability and an understanding of the scope of the university's commitments towards affordability. Given the complexity involved in this exercise, the task force members are working through the various aspects of the question in an iterative manner, taking into account various stakeholder perspectives and the available literature. The second set of issues for the task force comprise the known challenges UBC students face in terms of affordability. These include: the financial aid process; food insecurity; housing costs; cost of educational materials (over and above tuition and fees); the availability of scholarships; the allocation of financial aid between merit-based and need-based criteria, tuition and aid for international students; student loan and debt burden; and financial literacy and proper distribution of finance-related information to students so as to enable optimal financial decisions.

As a result of these deliberations, the task force has identified the following focus areas for formulating its set of recommendations:

1. Develop a multi-year tuition framework
2. Provide tools to help students make informed financial decisions
3. Revise the annual tuition consultation process
4. Minimize costs of educational materials
5. Address cost of living challenges (food security, housing, and childcare)
6. Update processes and procedures for the implementation of student aid
7. Further expand need-based aid to continuing international students
8. Increase fundraising for need-based aid
9. Develop indicators to monitor and assess student affordability over time
10. Advocate for increased student financial assistance programs at the provincial and federal government level

Some of the recommendations can be developed and implemented in the short-term while others require a longer-term approach. Some of them will require additional funding and some require process improvements. The SATF will bring its recommendations to the Board in March 2022, with implementation to follow Board approval.

Develop a multi-year tuition framework

Set tuition (and other related fees, if possible) for all the expected years of the student's degree program at the time the student is admitted

- Group students by cohort based on program and admission date

Provide tools to help students make informed financial decisions

Improve financial planning and wellness offerings on both campuses

- Approaches focus on enhancing and promoting financial wellness workshops (and offering them at UBCO), changing the first-year cost calculator to a multi-year calculator, and creating an online module as part of Academic Essentials

Support increased/deeper engagement with elected student leadership to:

- Understand student priorities linked to budgetary needs (inform university)
- Allow for a deep dive into the university's budget and budget process (inform students)

Minimize costs of educational materials

Ensure that: 1) the cost of educational materials is not a barrier to student success; and 2) UBC students have confidence that their educational materials costs are fair

- Approaches focus on costs of Digital Learning Materials, Open Education Resources (OERs), and opportunities for large-scale publisher negotiations on textbooks and/or digital assessment resources

Address cost of living challenges (food security, housing, and child care)

Develop research and a long-term strategy to learn more about systemic and comprehensive solutions to address food, housing, and child care costs

- Approaches focus on Food Hubs, a need-based housing bursary, a low-cost housing initiative that considers co-op housing and nano units, growth of university operated child care, and advocacy with the Provincial and Federal government (expand $10/day child care, etc.)

Update processes and procedures for the implementation of student aid

Ensure students are aware of financial resources available to them, combat student loan misinformation, and lower barriers for students to access financial aid

- Approaches focus on online applications for emergency funding, a review of the current communication strategy, flexible bursary funding, and addition of a student financial component (IRP student)

Further expand need-based aid to continuing international students

Investigate the feasibility of establishing a bursary program for International students

- Approaches focus on an LR10 policy review, exploring the possibility of an international housing bursary and reallocation of merit-based vs. need-based funding

Increase fundraising for need-based aid

Prioritize need-based funding (bursaries and hybrid awards) when fundraising for student awards

- Implement a $2 million matching program to serve as an incentive for donors to give more and larger gifts to priority award types
- Build awareness and support for need-based aid as a key feature of the upcoming comprehensive campaign

Develop indicators to monitor and assess student affordability over time

Ensure metrics assess the efficacy of initiatives and funds directed to supporting student affordability

- Approaches focus on utilizing metrics to raise awareness of current initiatives and assure the campus community that the University is a responsive and responsible steward of funds

Combine data sets (where possible and appropriate) to reveal new insights and provide a more comprehensive understanding of student affordability at UBC

Advocate for increased student financial assistance programs at the provincial and federal government level

Ensure more students benefit from access to sufficient aid

- Approaches focus on expanding and extending existing government programs, increasing loan maximums and award amounts, and building a coalition with post-secondary institutions and student groups to advocate for larger-scale student financial aid reform
